

Pontifical hat, known as a "gallero" with its 10 tassels, in four rows, on either side of the shield, all in green

Processional cross, which is placed in back of the shield and which extends above and below the shield

Personal arms representing his Polish heritage and his service to the Archdiocese of Baltimore. In the upper portion of the design, in red and silver (white), are the colors of the Polish national flag

The great seal of the Archdiocese of St. Louis (left side) is an azure, blue, field with a gold crusader's cross, and a crown representing St. Louis IX, King of France, patron of both the Archdiocese of St. Louis and City of St. Louis. On the extremes of the cross are found the fleur-de-lis flower that recalls the French foundation of the city.

To the right of the cross (chief dexter) is a silver rose on a red field, drawing upon the significance that Archbishop Rozanski's family name refers to "Rose flower" in Polish

A cross bottony (each arm terminates in a triple ball), which represented in red on silver, is a variant on the symbolism known as a "cross of St. Michael," the archbishop's baptismal patron

The 10 tassels, in four rows on either side of the shield represent the heraldic insignia of a prelate of the rank of archbishop by instruction of the Holy See of March 31, 1969

Open book of the Most Holy Scriptures

These charges, drawn from the arms of the Archdiocese of Baltimore, signify that His Excellency's ministry as a deacon, priest, and now as an archbishop is to spread God's Holy Word to the faithful of the archdiocese.

Archbishop Rozanski's motto, taken from Psalm 100

SERVE THE LORD WITH GLADNESS