

When you see negativity in the world, you may feel helpless. You want to make a difference, but the problems seem too big to face. However, this is not true. Even if you perform small acts, you can still make a difference. We were created in the image and likeness of God which means we are supposed to be in a loving relationship with him. The structure of our identity and worth is that we are loved by God. We all deserve God's love and we need to help others in order to live out God's calling for us.

To fully embrace God's love for us, we need to follow in Jesus' footsteps. We need to live out the Gospel and strive to be better people every day. The first step towards living out a culture of life is allowing Jesus to come into our hearts and transform us. If we follow His grace, our lives will show we have something beyond what the world offers. As a society, we tend to measure ourselves through false standards like our successes and failures. We may be tempted to think our lives have decreased in value because of this which isn't true. God's great love for all of us is the true source of our life, identity and dignity. God knows we are not perfect, and His love for us will never change even if we make mistakes. We also need to help others when they are in need. Our actions speak for themselves and are a great way to help preserve a culture of life.

We need to build a culture of life that will happily proclaim the truth of God's love, purpose and plan for all of us. When we encounter Christ, experience His love and deepen our relationship with Him, we become aware that all people have great worth. God's everlasting love for every single person in this world is a cause for happiness. Living your life and striving to be a better person every day can make our world a better place and promote a culture of life.

Josie O'Brien